

Drug and Device Law

Monday, September 29, 2008

Interesting Stuff On The Web

Every once in a while, we run into interesting stuff on the web.

Today, we thought we'd share a few things with you.

First, Professor William Rubinstein of Harvard Law School hosted the Class Action Prof Blog until he seemingly gave up the ghost last year. But, in his last post, he linked to this outline of cases decided under CAFA. The outline appears to be fairly comprehensive through the date on which it was prepared, in August 2007.

Second, the Federal Evidence Blog has this history explaining why recently enacted new Federal Rule of Evidence 502 does not contain a provision addressing selective waiver of the attorney client privilege or work product doctrine.

Finally, the Federal Civil Practice Bulletin has this post collecting many of the cases holding that, for purposes of assessing diversity jurisdiction, the citizenship of a Limited Liability Company is determined by the citizenship of all of its members. That should save you some time doing research when you next confront that question.

Posted by Beck/Herrmann at 7:59 AM

Labels: CAFA, Class Action, Evidence, Removal

0 comments:

Post a Comment

Newer Post

Home

Older Post

Subscribe to: Post Comments \(Atom\)

About

This blog contains JIM BECK's personal views (and those of several other Dechert attorneys) of various topics that arise in the defense of pharmaceutical and medical device product liability litigation. Please read the DISCLAIMER about the nature of this blog, and understand that you are accepting its terms, before reading any of our posts.

Blogging Team

James M. Beck is the author of, among other things, Drug and Medical Device Product Liability Handbook (2004) (with Anthony Vale). He is a counsel in the Philadelphia office of Dechert LLP and can be reached at james.beck@dechert.com.

Stephen McConnell has authored articles and chapters on product liability (though nothing as snappy or authoritative as Beck's book), and has tried cases that somehow evaded the pretrial gauntlet. He is a partner in the Philadelphia office of Dechert LLP and can be reached at stephen.mcconnell@dechert.com.

Will Sachse hasn't written as much as Beck or McConnell, although he has been known to scribe articles from time to time. He has experience handling complex class action, preemption, and First Amendment issues, and also doubles as an antitrust and consumer fraud lawyer. He is a partner in the Philadelphia office of Dechert LLP and can be reached at will.sachse@dechert.com.

Michelle Hart Yeary is a seasoned products liability litigator who focuses on attempting to bring order to the chaos that is mass torts, concentrating on the practicalities and realities of defending coordinated and multidistrict litigation. She is counsel in the Princeton office of Dechert LLP and can be reached at michelle.yeary@dechert.com.

Mark Herrmann Blogger Emeritus. October 28, 2006 to December 16, 2009.