INTERNET LEGAL RESEARCH WEEKLY

July 20, 2008

Tom Mighell

Welcome to Issue #305 of the Internet Legal Research Weekly, a newsletter that delivers relevant and timely legal research information, and other fun stuff, to your inbox every Sunday. If you like what you read, please forward this newsletter to anyone you think might be interested, and encourage him or her to do the same! To subscribe, all you have to do is visit Inter Alia and fill out the subscription form -- it's free!

Legally Relevant – Sites on the Internet

Federal Evidence Review \(\$\$\)

Every month, the folks at the Federal Evidence Review track important evidence cases as they are decided, and produce a report with commentary, practical suggestions, and analysis on these decisions. A subscription will cost you $995/year, but there's plenty you can read for free on the site. For example, the site provides free access to a number of evidence resources, including the rules themselves, advisory notes, rule amendments, and information on key evidence cases. The Federal Evidence Blog also provides regular updates on new cases.
